MOVEMENTS OF THE JAPANESE EMBASSY.

THE JAPANESE EMBASSY visited Blackwell's Island yesterday, in company with the Commissioners of Charities and Correction. After inspecting the prison, hospital and lunatic asylum, a lunatic was served and the party proceeded to the Japanese Consulate, where the secretary dined with General Grant on Sunday evening, and with the Japanese Consul the party will inspect the Brooklyn Bridge this morning.

right between the acts what a thought of him.

"Yes, he's a very nice little man," she answered. "He is very retired and doesn't like to meet people; but he always received me most cordially."

"Yes; he often wanted me to sing a certain aria from an opera written by one of his rivals. But perhaps that was his only complaint. He was a good singer, but he was longed, and so, of course, could sing it better than any one else."

"How long it since you last saw him!"

"When I was in Italy singing in 'Porsuffage,' another role I created. He was so pleased with my singing that he asked me to play the part of the Count in his opera. He never saw several miles for the express purpose of calling upon me."

"He is to be regarded as a composer?"

"He is said to be one of the greatest geniuses living. He is said to write an opera for me, for he said I was the only person who could sing his operas after my journey."

"Do you consider the finest of his works?"

"Der Schreckliche Maus." I appeared in that opera in Germany; and it was my rendition of the part that so excited the audience. I was called back several times to write an opera for me. But I refused the bell. I must go."

The visitor departed with a profound knowledge of the merits of the great composer.—[LITA.]

HEADING ON THE HORRORS.—Lady Midias: "Adele! Adele! take the train away, my dear Mrs. de Tompkins, and only tell me my horror, when the train started, at discovering that we were actually in the train!"

Mrs. de Tompkins: "Yes, I was so startled, my dear Lady! Yes! Very awfully indeed! You'd taken a third-class ticket, I suppose?"

Lady Midias: "Horror of Lady and Miss de Tompkins! take a second carriage all to themselves!"—[Punch.]

The Italian opera season at San Antonio, Tex., was narrowly averted by a slight drawback, to which casual reference is made in a journal of that city, that the prompter's voice could be heard at the entrance door.

The Prophecy of the Great Storm had about as much truth in it as there is in the statements made by unscrupulous plaster makers who claim to make plasters that set quicker and better than ALLOCOCK'S. However, the fact that the weather has been so good since ALLOCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER. One trial will prove their superiority.

Special Notices

Standing All Alone.
 "Beyond all doubt BLENKON'S CAPSICUM POROUS PLASTERS are the best in use," said Mr. H. J. Casebeer, the popular druggist and pharmacist of Eighteenth and Sixth-ave. "They are prompt in action and satisfy all who use them. I sold them very rapidly. These plasters in some quickness, though, and in some cases, are curative of the ailment. They succeed where the slow-acting and uncertain plasters of other days completely fail. Use them for all purposes which demand an external remedy. For Seagrass, Local Habitations, Lumbago, Sore Chins, and Lamé Backs, they are particularly valuable. Look out for imitations with similar names. Word of CAUTION: cut in genuine. Price 25 cents.
